Frederick W. Seward

Assistant Secretary of State during the Administrations of Lincoln, Johnson and Hayes
With Portraits. Octavo. 500 pages. $3.50 net.

Frederick William Seward, the son of Lincoln's Secretary of State, had a remarkably interesting and distinguished career. He was sent to warn Lincoln of the plot to assassinate him in Baltimore during the year 1861. He was Assistant Secretary of State from 1861-69 and from 1877-81. As Acting Secretary of State he sat in the Cabinets of Lincoln, Johnson, and Hayes. He was nearly murdered in his father's defense during the fatal events of April 14, 1865. In 1867, he was sent on a mission with Admiral Porter to negotiate West Indian treaties. He took part in the purchase of Alaska and in the negotiations for Pago-Pago Harbor, Samoa. He held many other posts of honor and participated in events of national and international importance. His survey of men, scenes, and activities during an exceedingly important epoch in the history of the Republic constitutes an invaluable record.

Note: Purchasers of the delightful life of John Hay, published last year will realize that here is a volume of the same class, and one which will prove equally acceptable as a Christmas Gift.

Press Comment:

"Is a difficult book to review for the reason that its nearly 500 large pages are so completely filled with matters of the most intense interest to every live American that the reviewer has the utmost difficulty in deciding what to refer to."—Brooklyn Eagle.

"Far more fascinating than a novel, this lively volume; richer, too, in the quality called atmosphere and in suggestive inspiration. The kind of book, in addition, that may be read over and over, reopened anywhere."—Chicago Herald.

"Frederick William Seward had a career almost as remarkable as that of his illustrious father. . . . A delightful treat in store for the reader.— Washington Times.

THE NEW MAP OF AFRICA

By Herbert Adams Gibbons

Author of "The New Map of Europe," "Paris Reborn," etc.

HIS book does for Africa what the author's "The New Map of Europe" did for that continent: it gives the history, especially on the diplomatic side, of the crucial years from 1899 to the great war as they affected Africa. Necessarily, the author also glances at African affairs before 1899, as far back as 1850, and considers the future of that rich and coveted continent.

Africa offers to the overcrowded, ambitious and powerful European nations their nearest and otherwise most available field of expansion and commercial exploitation. The military and diplomatic movements of the contesting countries, as recorded and interpreted by Mr. Gibbons, make a book as interesting as it is historically important.

THE BERNE CONVENTION IN TIME OF WAR

ELSEWHERE we print a letter from Reginald T. Smith, the honored president of the British Publishers' Association, including the opinion of the Comptroller General of Patents of Great Britain on the suspension of enemy copyrights by the recent Trading with the Enemy (Copyright) Act No. 2. We also print a letter later received from the secretary of the Incorporated Society of Authors, Playwrights and Composers. We have also before us a broadside from Mr. R. B. Marston, editor of The Publishers' Circular of London, headed "What Do We Get As a Nation and What Do We Lose?", presenting the view opposed to the Comptroller General's argument, which Mr. Marston, at the expense of personal popularity among many of his publishing confrères, has so ably put forward. We are glad to note that the London Bookseller concurs with Mr. Marston in this view.

The basic question underlying this discussion is whether private property is to be respected in time of war and whether international treaties respecting private property lapse or are suspended between enemy countries. America, in common with most civilized nations, has hitherto upheld strictly the right of private property, in war as in peace, and the doctrine that it can be requisitioned only when necessary for war use and then only with proper compensation to the individual. The principle has been sadly disregarded in the present war, but it seems to us peculiarly unfortunate that the British Government should join in this disregard, and especially as to property so peculiarly of individual ownership as copyrights.

The position of the British Comptroller General that international treaties are de facto and de jure suspended in time of war between enemy countries would seem to be at least doubtful, except in the case of treaties necessarily abrogated by war. It has been the belief in America, and the entente powers have held, that the treaty protecting Belgium should not have been violated by Germany even under press of war necessity; and the present action of the British Government in this as in some other matters in controversy with America, unfortunately seems to negative its own protest against the violation of Belgium. Belgium was, in its nationality, in the relation of a private citizen with respect to war, and the private citizen seems to us vice versa in the position of Belgium. We should have expected that the British Government would have stood firmly for the rights of individuals to their property even under war conditions. France, to her great credit, seems to have taken the position definitely that private rights in literary property under the Berne convention are not to be affected by the war-notably in the case of music copyrights-and German publishers are understood to have taken the same position, which it seems to us is the correct one. It may be added that the belligerents in general appeal to the Hague international regulations in present diplomatic negotiations, and that, in theory if not in practice, they accept the Geneva Red Cross convention, both of them international treaties, which, if the view of the British Government be accepted, lapse between enemy countries in time of war.

The British Comptroller General makes the special argument, which seems to us in the nature of special pleading, that the Trading with the Enemy (Copyright) Act No. 2, was necessary for the protection of copyright proprietors in enemy countries. This would seem to be rather antagonistic to the other statement, and it ignores the facts in the case at issue at the beginning of the present discussion. Then, a neutral publisher, in Holland, had acquired from the German author copyright for other countries in a work which English publishers desired to reprint. This solution of the question was entirely in accordance with the Berne convention and afforded an easy way out. Copyrights of books not worth reprinting, to which the Comptroller General naively refers, would not come into question because nobody would want to reprint them.

We honor France for her action and we regret that of the mother country, for which we believe no adequate justification can be had in the law of nations and from unbiased legal authority.

THE GIRL AND HER BOOKS

By Mary Katharine Reely, Literary Editor of the Book Review Digest and Staff Reviewer for the Publishers' Weekly Book Review.

That women are the readers of novels is a commonplace assertion. If it is true the tastes of women must exert an important influence in shaping the trend of modern literature. It is they who buy the best sellers and who make demands at the desks of public libraries. Isn't it rather curious then that so much attention should be paid to the reading of boys, so little to that of girls?

At holiday time last year the literary journals abounded in suggestions for boys' reading, with lists of recommended books for boys compiled by scout masters and others and replies and counter-replies from authors, publishers and librarians. I do not remember one paragraph devoted to the girl and her books.

This neglect of girls is not limited to the field of books of course. Girls are an afterthought everywhere. Whether it be in the erection of a Christian Association building or a reformatory, boys come first. There is, I believe, a mythical belief to the effect that girls are sweet, gentle and insipid by nature-"sugar and spice and all things nice, you remember-and when a girl "goes wrong" it is our way to hold up our hands in horror, say that a bad girl is worse than a bad boy and hence hopeless, forgetting how little may have been done beforehand to keep her going right. Similarly, it is a simpler matter to blame women patrons of public libraries for the amount of trashy fiction read than it is to inquire how and why their tastes were formed.

There are some other commonplace assertions concerning the reading of girls. One is to the effect that boys' books are better than girls'. Another is that girls prefer boys' books anyway. The latter, it seems to me, is a way of evading the question. If girls do prefer books written for boys, it is pertinent to ask Why? And whether it is true or not, there still remains the fact that books are written for girls, advertised as books for girls, presumably bought for girls, and, we may suppose, in time read by girls. So it has seemed to me worth while to spend some time in considering them. At least no harm will come from assembling a list of books which are written for girls and which deal with a girl's specific interests and occupations.

Little girls—those under twelve—may be omitted. They are provided for with Mother Goose, fairy tales, folk lore and legend. But young people of adolescent age have a right, I feel, to a contemporary literature of their own, to read and to own books that are of their own day and generation.

Of the juvenile books written and published, more than one half are for boys. A visit to any large bookstore will convince one of this. There are a number of possible reasons for the preponderance in number of books for boys. The obvious one is that they probably pay better. If it is true that both boys and girls read boys' books, they must have a larger circulation, for I do not believe that any one has ever stood sponsor for the statement that girls' books are universally popular with boys. Another possible reason may be that books for boys are easier to write. A certain type of cheap adventure story requires very little inventive genius or attention to probability on the part of the author. He may take his young hero to any part of the globe or into the air above it or the waters under it. Since the field for a girl's exploits is more limited the exactions on the author who would weave a story about them are greater. A consideration of many books of the above type for boys leads me to challenge another popular belief to the effect that the average level of books for boys is higher than that of books for girls. It may be so, but between the over-sentimental story for girls and the over-sensational tale for boys, there is little choice.

The assertion that books for boys are popular with girls is usually accepted as a condemnation of books for girls. That girls do read boys' books is very true. Cooper and Castlemon and Kirk Munroe have all been numbered as girls' favorites, but this may only indicate a wide range of interests on the part of girl readers. It may be that a girl's tastes are more catholic than a boy's. And it may be, too, that girls pick their favorites from among books for boys, because the right kind of girls' books have not been placed in their hands. For I feel that justice has not been done to the many good books that are written for girls, and I have almost come to the conclusion that, far from being sweepingly inferior, books for girls may claim a distinction that boys' books lack. I am almost ready to say that the best books for girls are better than the best books for boys. The two particulars in which girls' books may claim distinction are the greater attention paid to character and the consideration given to human relationships.

Any entertaining story for young people that is well written and true to the conditions of normal life, may be called a good story. The best books for young people, like the best books for adults, are those which help them to understand themselves and their relations to the world about them. Occasionally there is a book for girls that does this. The majority of girls' books attempt to do it. In the usual girls' story, the heroine is presented in her natural environment, in her relations with her family—mother and father, older and younger brothers and sisters, family friends. In the usual story for boys, the boy is treated as an isolated phenomenon. The recipe for writing a boys' story would begin: First isolate your boy. Put him in a boys' school, surrounded by other boys and men teachers (rather vague, indefinite beings, with the possible excep-tion of the football coach); or, put him in a boys' camp, again surrounded only by boys; or, send him off on a hike accompanied by boys and a scout master. At all events remove him from his home and family. With all our sentimental belief in a mother's influence, isn't it rather strange that so little account is taken of it by writers of books for youth? Do you remember in "The Brushwood Boy" how on the night that Georgie comes home, his mother goes to his room and they talk as mothers and sons should talk if there is to be any future for the Empire? But scenes like that are rare in both juvenile and adult fiction. The typical mother in a story for boys is an odd combination of maternal solicitude and ignorance. She visits the school on the day of the great game to have palpitations of the heart and to ask foolish questions. I rather think I am justified in holding that mothers are more human in books for girls, so, for that matter, are fathers. For even in mediocre books for girls this phenomenon of isolation is more rare, altho the silly and inane boarding school story is common enough.

I want to digress here to ask why it is that the typical school story for either boys or girls is the boarding school story. We hear a great deal in these days about Americanism. Nobody is quite sure what it means, but certainly the most American of institutions is the public school and the majority of boys and girls go not to St. John's or St. Mary's, but thru the eight grades and thru high school. Yet how rare is the high school story. Why not have more Americanism in juvenile books? Among books for boys, I think those of Christy Mathewson have this quality, and in "Lotta Embury's Career," by Elia Peattie, published last year we were given a truly American story for girls. A new story published this year, Margaret Ashmun's "Isabel Carleton's Year," also meets this test. I could find no better example of the type of story I have been talking about, a story of normal American family life, written without sham or sen-

Some of the best books for young people have resulted when the skilled hand of a master story teller has turned to the making of juvenile books. Alice Brown wrote one such story, to be highly commended because its plot turned on a question of loyalty and honor, ideals too seldom held before the vision of the growing girl. E. V. Lucas, who has half a dozen or more literary accomplishments at his command, has also written a delightful story for girls. It is a story about boys and girls both, but I think girls will like it best. It is one of those unusual books that are both for and about children. Books about children are read by grown-ups, books for children by the children themselves.

"The Slowcoach" can be read by both. "Did you like it?" a little girl to whom it had been loaned was asked. "I didn't like it," she said gravely, "I loved it."

The "Rebecca" books come in this class, so

The "Rebecca" books come in this class, so do many of the other of the Kate Douglas Wiggin stories. So does "Emmy Lou," and there is a new "Emmy Lou" story this year, by the way.

In addition to the books for children which grown-ups read with delight, there are the grown-up novels which may be read with pleasure by children. How soon may a girl begin to read Dickens? Thackeray? George Eliot? As soon as she will read them, I should say. If she can find herself absorbed in "Tale of Two Cities," or "Henry Esmond," or "Mill on the Floss" the time has arrived for her to read it, and a lucky and happy girl she will be if she happens on to such books before they are forced on her in school as "required" reading. In the list at the end of this discussion, I shall slip in a few of the big novels that it will be well to have about the house where the girl may pick them up when the psychological moment arrives.

The great failing of books for girls is sentimentality, saccharinity. Healthy girls ab-hor all sickly sentiment. That is one reason why they turn to their brothers' books. Another reason is that they like adventure, and lacking adventure stories of their own, they must put up with the adventures of boys. Now the best part of the fun in reading an adventure story is to imagine one's self in the place of the hero, and the girl who must imagine herself in the rôle of a boy hero is at a disadvantage—altho it can be done. Fortunately there are a few books of adventure for girls. "Smuggler's Island," by Clarissa Kneeland, published last year, is one of them. It is a fascinating story of castaways on a desert island in which the principal part is played by a girl. Another story is "The Boarded-Up House," by Augusta H. Seaman, a quite thrilling tale that never goes beyond the bounds of probability. Another is "Partners of the Forest Trail," by C. H. Claudy, the story of a brother and sister who are lost in the north woods. Again the girl plays the leading part. Another is Elsie Singmaster's "Emmeline," the story of a little girl's adventures at the battle of Gettysburg.

And if girls want to read of the real adventures of women, they will find them in such books as Charmian London's "Log of the Snark"; Violetta Thurstan's "Field Hospital and Flying Column," and Arley Munson's "Jungle Days," all written for older readers, but well fitted, I should think, to appeal to the girl who dreams of great deeds. There is a time when the domestic and housewifely virtues seem a trifle tame to the imagination of a girl. And what of it, since the similarly homely ideal of providing for a family would make no impression on the boy who dreams of being a general or an arctic explorer. Girls, like boys, have a right to their dreams.

Biographies of the great and adventurous souls among women should be placed in the girl's hands-lives of Florence Nightingale, Julia Ward Howe, Susan B. Anthony, Mary Lyon, Frances Willard and others. Biographies of these women written especially for girls may not be obtainable, but I do not believe it is necessary to have books that are written down for girl readers. Older girls will surely read with enjoyment Anna Howard Shaw's "Story of a Pioneer."

Indeed, I should not want it supposed that I would limit a girl's reading to books written for girls. I am glad they read boys' books and hope they will continue to do so, and I hope too that they will read the right kind of grown-up books. In many respects this is a glorious generation to be a girl in. I never pass a modern playground that I do not rejoice for the girl of to-day. Dressed sensibly in gym suits, they do openly and with encouragement things that we, in my day, did surreptitiously and in defiance of custom. Has the term tom-boy gone out of use now that tom-boys are accepted with approval? Such movements as the Camp Fire Girls and Girl Pioneers help to make this a wonderful century for girls. Books like Lina and Adelia Beard's "On the Trail," show that the world has moved.

Good stories for girls should have grown out of the Camp Fire idea, but so far I have not seen them. Many stories of the kind have been written, but I do not know of one worthy of a place on a list of best books. They err on the side of exaggeration and have a touch of the sensationalism of the adventure story for boys. However, in time the good Camp Fire story may be written.

I hope that the list that follows will show that there is a worthy number of books in the world planned for the girl's reading. Perhaps it will show that girls are not so neglected after all, although less is said about But it cannot be emphasized too strongly that to try to limit a girl's reading to the classes of books named here-to books by and about women-would be absurd-so absurd indeed that the point really cannot need emphasis. Fortunately a girl's proclivity for browsing in her brother's books would be a safeguard in any case from danger of over-feminization.

INCREASED PAPER PRICES NOT DUE TO INCREASED COSTS, SAYS FED-ERAL COMMISSION

ALTHO the Federal Trade Commission has not yet completed its investigation of the paper situation, the public hearings which it proposes being still to come, it has already secured data which seem to it of sufficient importance to warrant the publication of a preliminary report. This report, which was given out November 4, in the form of a statement, declares that, so far as any rise of costs of production was concerned, the commission has so far found little or no justification for the soaring increases of paper prices which have put such an unprecedented and unexpected burden on the publisher.

Indeed, the commission reports that careful analysis of the cost sheets of typical paper mills warrants the conclusion that, during the first half of this year, when paper was being most systematically "boosted," the manufacturing costs of paper-or at least of newsprint paper, with which the commission was chiefly concerned-were showing a slight but actual decrease.

The statement says:

"The price advance in newsprint paper which occasioned the investigation began early in 1916 and has continued to the present. Most newsprint paper, probably about ninety per cent., is sold on contract for periods of a year or more. Before the price advance began, contract prices for newsprint paper were generally less than $2 per hundred pounds, f. o. b.

"During the first half of 1916, contract prices for large quantities in some instances went as high as $3 per hundred pounds, and since July 1, 1916, have run as high as $3.50. Most of the contracts now in operation will expire within three or four months. On current market purchases, newspaper publishers have been paying manufacturers and jobbers very much higher prices. Before January 1. 1916, current market prices ranged generally between $2 and $3 per hundred pounds, delivered, depending on quantity, freight and other circumstances, but since that time they have gone up as high as $6 or $7 per hundred pounds for a considerable volume of business and even higher in exceptional instances.

"The average price received by domestic manufacturers of newsprint paper did not advance in anything like the degree that current market prices advanced, because most of the paper was sold under contracts previously made. On the average, the net receipts of domestic manufacturers of newsprint paper were less than $2 a hundred pounds during the first half of 1916.

"The average cost of manufacture of newsprint paper in domestic mills was less than $33 a ton, or $1.65 a hundred pounds, during the first half of 1916, as shown by both the manufacturers' own cost sheets and by the costs as revised by the accountants of the commission. Furthermore, these average costs were slightly lower than the average costs in any year from 1913 to 1915.

"Tho the average cost declined in the first half of 1916, the market prices of some of the materials of manufacture advanced and were unusually high.

"It should be noted that the most important materials which advanced in price, sulphite and groundwood, were produced by most of the paper manufacturers without an increase in cost, and not bought at market prices, while some other manufacturers were protected against the increase in prices by contracts. Some of the other materials which were purchased at advanced prices were very small factors in the total cost.

"It is generally claimed in the trade that costs in the future will increase particularly on account of the scarcity of labor in the Canadian woods and the consequent increase in labor cost of bringing logs to the mills. This is necessarily a matter of prediction, concerning which the commission expresses no opinion.

STOCKS OF PAPER DECLINE

"The stocks of newsprint paper, which are very small in comparison with the production, not only declined during the first half of 1916, but also were lower than at any time during the year 1915.

"Before the recent price advance, certain other grades of paper were showing higher profit per ton than newsprint paper, and there was a tendency to change from this grade to other grades. This movement seems to have been checked for the present by the high prices of newsprint paper. It is stated that before the end of this year four new machines, two in this country and two in Canada, with an aggregate daily capacity of about 160 tons, will begin operations on newsprint paper. Other projected or pending developments will apparently require a somewhat longer time to become available.

"It is not intended in this statement to make any prediction about the future course of newsprint paper prices, but merely to indicate some important facts to those interested in the cutting and selling of paper in order that they may act more advisedly in making new contracts. Moreover, the facts shown here are confined to matters of a statistical character and do not cover other phases of the situation, including various trade activities of the newsprint paper manufacturers, jobbers and newspaper publishers. These questions will be a subject of further consideration by the commission, and some of them will be covered by the public hearings which, as already stated, the commission intends to hold in the near future."

The commission announces that before issuing its report, public hearings will be conducted and manufacturers, publishers and others interested will have an opportunity to appear. No date is set for the hearings, but the report is said to be ready to send to the press soon.

SHARP INCREASE IN BIBLE PRICES

November I brought a thirty per cent. increase in leather-bound Bibles and a forty per cent. increase in the cloth and imitation cloth-bound Bibles published by the Oxford University Press, Thomas Nelson & Sons and James Pott & Co. Altho we have not as yet learned of increases by other Bible publishers outside New York City, it is highly probable that the increase is general. Leather and paper have been vying with each other all along in mounting cost, but the last straw, or rather one of the last straws, which have caused the present increase is the embargo placed by the British government upon the export of sheep and goat skivers. The British have commandeered all such skins to line soldiers' coats during the coming winter, and as London still remains the leather center of the world, this means an almost total cessation of the importation of skivers into America. The head of one American house stated that it would probably be February before the British soldier demand would be sufficiently satisfied to allow the resumption of exports—if, indeed, the British government would allow it then.

Meanwhile, of course, Bible paper has continued its deadly advance, showing an increase of about seven cents a pound in the last eight or ten months. Coloring for the red edges of Bibles has gone from eighty cents to twelve dollars, glue from $37.50 to $96, and so on thru all departments of Bible manufacturing.

JOINT COMMITTEE OF LITERARY ARTS TO ENTERTAIN VISITING AUTHORS

Following a conference of representatives of literary clubs of New York City, a joint committee of the Literary Arts has been organized to entertain distinguished authors from abroad, and to arrange meetings for the general discussion of questions of special interest to literary craftsmen. The committee is composed of William P. Treat, president of the Authors' Club; Winston Churchill, president of the Authors' League; John G. Agar, president of the National Arts Club; Ernest Peixotto, president of the MacDowell Club; Ida M. Tarbell, president of the Pen and Brush Club; Augustus Thomas, president of the Society of American Dramatists; and Edward J. Wheeler, president of the Poetry Society of America.

The primary purpose of the new committee is to furnish some adequate welcome to such visiting writers as Masefield, Bennett, Wells, and Anatole France, instead of allowing them, as heretofore, to find their haphazard way among the scattered societies of the city. For to the literary men who have come to visit this country in the past, the great city has presented its blank face instead of a friendly greeting and sympathetic understanding. Individual recognition and welcome they have found, but nothing representative and social. In the case of Tagore, for instance, who is coming to New York soon, there will be some sort of conjunction, with the Poetry Society in the foreground and the other societies cooperating.

A less sharply defined purpose of the new committee, but one of more immediate importance to the book-trade, is its avowed intention of "emphasizing the value and dignity of the book." The first step of the new organization in this direction will be the series of receptions under its auspices in connection with the annual Books of the Year Exhibition at the National Arts Club in New York City during this month.

NOTES ON THE FRENCH BOOK-TRADE AND RECENT FRENCH BOOKS By JEAN A. PICARD*

IN VIEW OF THE FACT that paper bindings have been suggested as "one way out" for the American publisher confronted with rising manufacturing costs, it may be of more than passing interest to note what France has done and is doing in the matter of paper bindings. It should be said at the outset that the question of publishing novels in cloth has really never come up in France, the reason being that the buyer wants the story exclusively, and reserves his decision to keep it or to throw it away until he has read it. He does not want to pay for cloth or board which has little if any value as a binding and represents a higher manufacturing cost than the paper cover. If, however, he finds the book is worth while, he has it bound in any permanent style he may prefer. For years the old-style paper cover—generally yellow—was used practica!ly without any change. During the past year, however, there has been a growing tendency among the publishers to give the public something better than the yellow cover, so that while a few of the best publishing houses

—Fasquelle, Calman Lévy, le Mercure de France, Lemerre (novels), Hachette, Colin (essays)-still cling to the older style, other houses, more especially the new ones, have tried experiments out of the beaten path by using a better quality of paper and selecting agreeable colors, also by using illustrated covers (this last idea, however, has proved the least successful, as it has usually been used for books of a lower literary standard—detective stories, etc.). The most successful of these newer bindings seems to be the white, cream or grayish paper cover of heavier weight than before, with a good typographical display in one or two colors (Nouvelle Revue Française, Crès). Incidentally, it might be added that this tendency to better the physical make-up of the book has also been extended to paper and type, while it is not unusual to find these books either illustrated or decorated by very good artists, the best example of these being, we believe, the Crès collection, "Les Maitres du livre" and "Les Proses," where wood engravings have been usually used.

One of the best examples of these "new" French books, attractively bound and printed and still cheap in price, is the "Bibliothèque illustrée," published by the house of Larousse, a fine series, sold at a very reasonable price of 1.50 francs. The covers, printed in white and red, are of a creamy heavy paper, refolded on another cover sewn with the book. The frontispiece is the reproduction of an original portrait of the author, the chapter heads and tails are original drawings, and the types have been carefully selected to complete the good appearance of the work; they are delivered with a crystal paper jacket. The American book-trade, we understand, objects to paper bindings on the score that they soon become dog-eared and soiled. Proper handling, however, prolongs the life of the paper bound book in France. The following precautions are taken by the better French dealers in handling paper books: They are put on tables or in windows, lying flat and not standing, and whenever it is necessary to use them standing a tape is tied around them so that the pages are held together. In the stockroom the book is, so far as possible, kept flat, and quantities of the same title are put in piles. When standing, such books are always held upright with holders. The crystal paper jackets in which many of the books are now delivered are left on the books, especially on the stock books. In case of copies which do get soiled, French publishers are usually willing to supply extra fresh covers on demand.

A NEW PUBLISHING HOUSE, "La Société Lit-téraire de France," has come into existence and will announce its first publications shortly; prices will range from 2.50 and 3.50 francs for ordinary publications, to 10 and 50 francs demi-luxe, 100 up for de luxe editions. Its aim will be to give the best care to all editions, either cheap or expensive, and to have all the books published by them artistic and soigné in appearance. It will also reprint editions now out of the reach of the average buyer in nice demi-luxe at moderate prices.

^{*}M. Picard may be addressed at 26 Gramercy Park, New York City, by booksellers or librarians desiring information regarding French books of any

Among the modern authors will be: de Gourmont, Donnay, Maurras, Bourget, etc. They will also publish books of the young authors. It is an interesting experiment which is bound to appeal to the American booklovers who have become so interested in the last years in fine and limited editions.

A WORD REGARDING THE VARIOUS EDITIONS OF the French classics might not be amiss to those who are catering to the growing de-mand for these books in America: In France many editions of the French classics can be found at all prices, the best ones adapted for school work ranging between twenty-five and seventy-five cents. Nearly all of these contain notes (in French) and a preface of in-Library editions, with or without terest. foreword or notes, are found at prices from fifty cents to twelve dollars a volume, ranging from the most popular editions to the very fine ones with illustrations.

By far the most important edition of French classics is the large collection of Hachette, "Les Grands Ecrivains de la France," includes the complete standard works of French authors, with the texts ne varietur. This collection gives in each volume a very good study of the author's life and influence. The writers of this collection are mostly members of the Académie. The Hachette school editions are handy bound volumes, with very complete notes. Garner, Fasquelle, Larousse, Flammarion also have series at prices ranging from .95 to 3.50 francs. Colin and Delagrave publish series of selected pages of authors of the nineteenth century, which are invaluable to the student of contemporary literature.

The reader who wants classical editions to keep in his library will use mostly the above editions in library bindings.

THE EXHIBIT of the Books of the Year at the National Arts Club will this year have one table devoted to recent French publications.

Among the Books recently published in France let us mention the new works of the Abbé Felix Klein, chaplain at the American hospital of Neuilly, "Les Douleurs qui hospital of Neuilly, "Les Douleurs qui espèrent"; it is a great homage to the morale and faith of the wounded soldier. A beautiful record of that same morale of the soldier is found in Jean Renaud's "La Tranchée Rouge" (Hachette 3.50). In this book Mr. Renaud gives also an interesting idea of the mental attitude of the French soldier towards his enemies.

The problem of Greece is considerably enlightened by two new works of great importance "La Politique de la Grèce" by Venizelos (Imprimerie de l'Est frs. 3.) and "Ainsi parla Venizelos" (Etudes de politique extérieure grecque) by Leon Maccas (Plon frs. 3.50). The first of these two volumes contains a preface by Joseph Reinach, the eminent member of the Army parliamentary committee and military critic.

The well known academician, Gabriel Hanotaux, president of the Paris committee of France-Amérique, publishes in book form his articles in the Figaro and other papers, "Pendant la grande Guerre, études diplomatiques et historiques, août-décembre 1914" (Plon 3.50).

Selected pages of all authors killed in action are being collected by Larousse for his literary series: "Anthologie des écrivains morts pour la Guerre," 4 ème volume 0.75.

An interesting book written by a neutral, Colonel Angell of the Norwegian army, "Le Soldat Serbe," a study of and a tribute to the Serbian soldier, is meant to emphasize the necessity of defense and preparedness for small neutral states in Europe. Henri Ghéon, one of the most prominent authors of The Nouvelle Revue Française, has written while at the front a new book of poems, "Foi en la France," which contains some of the best verses written since the beginning of the war (3.50).

Commandant Emile Vedel's book, "Nos marins à la Guerre" (Payot 3.50), is a wel-come addition to the few existing publications on the part played by the navy in the present

Robert Vaucher has given us the first important work in French on the Italian army, Avec les Armées de Cardona" (Payot 3.50). Mr. Vaucher is a war correspondent and was in a very good position to see the difficult fighting of the Italian soldiers; the book is very well written.

A new book of souvenirs is out. It is by an artilleryman, Lieutenant Robert Deville. who depicts the first month of the conflict: "Virton, la Marne, Carnet de Route d'un artilleur" (Chapelot 2 frs.). Another big battle of the beginning of the war, Morhange. is depicted by R. Christian-Frogé who was an officer with the marines "Morhange et les Marsouins de Lorraine" (Berger-Levrault 3.50). Three new booklets are announced in the Collection Bellum: "Dix jours en Italie" by Maurice Barrès, "La Pentecôte d' Arras" by Joseph Schewaebel, "La Passion de notre Frère le Poilu" by Marc Leclerc (Crès 1.25). Like the others in the collection they have a real literary value, are carefully printed and an agreeable addition to a library.

Hugues le Roux publishes at Plon (3.50), some of his personal impressions of the war "Au Champ d' Honneur" which contains some very beautiful and pathetic pages in which he tells of the death of his son.

It is worth while knowing for the booksellers that Mr. Stéphane Lausanne, editor in chief of the Matin, at present in this country, has published his impressions of the war in a book, "Feuilles de Routes D'un Mobilisé" (Payot 3.50).

Jacques Normand, soldier in 1870, active in hospital work in 1914-1916, publishes some poems written in the course of the two wars which Frenchmen of his age have seen afflict-ing their country. These poetical works of ing their country. the same man written 44 years apart in such tragic circumstances are curious and striking. They are sold for the benefit of the blind.

In the field of art, an important publication is just out (Laurens 80 frs.), "Delacroix ra-

WELL IN COLORADO

Denver, Colo., Oct. 24, 1916.

Editor THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY:

We think it will be of interest to book-sellers of the United States to learn of the experience of the booksellers in Denver and Colorado in selling rebinds at 60c. per copy. After three months of selling at this price the booksellers and department stores have found that there has been no falling off in the sales and the few complaints which have been made in regard to the price have come from purchasers who lived in communities where the price was much lower.

In order that the new increase in the cost of rebinds may be met with profit to all dealers in books, the retail selling price, beginning Oct. 25th, in all book stores and book departments in Denver and thruout the State of Colorado will be 75c. We all feel that it is the opportune time to set a retail price on this merchandise that will make it profitable to all concerned. We feel sure it will be just as easy to get 75c. as it is to get 60c.

BRITISH COMPTROLLER OF PATENTS QUOTED IN DEFENSE OF ENEMY COPYRIGHT ACT

London, Eng., October 23, 1916.

Editor THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY:

In order that there may be no question as to the attitude of the Publishers' Association towards the Trading with the Enemy (Copyright) Act 1916, I should be obliged if you would print the following statement made by the Comptroller General of Patents at the recent hearing of an application made under the new Act:-

"The Trading with the Enemy (Copyright) Act, 1916, has been the subject of considerable misrepresentation. The Act was passed to regulate the position of publications made in enemy countries during the period of the war. It applies only to such publications, and is not concerned with publications or productions made in such countries prior to the outbreak of war. The Act was necessary in this country because, by the law of England, Conventions and Treaties between Great Britain and the countries with which she is at war are held to be suspended; and according to the best legal opinion such suspension equally takes place—as between the belligerent countries—in the case of International Conventions.

"If this opinion is correct the Berne Convention is no longer operative in this country during the war as between the United Kingdom and enemy countries. No protection therefore can be claimed under it for publications made during the war in enemy countries or under the English Copyright Act of 1911. Such publications therefore, made during the period of hostilities in countries at war with the United Kingdom, in the absence of legislation, are not entitled to copyright in this country. The Trading with the Enemy Copyright Act, 1916, was passed to solve any this country. doubts upon the point, and its object was to obviate the difficulties and inconveniences arising from this position of unprotected copyright, and to regulate any dealings with such publications. Instead of permitting an unregulated reproduction of such works in this country which would be lawful under the circumstances stated above, the Act creates a copyright in such publications, and vests it in a public official, namely, the Public Trustee. No reproduction of such works will consequently be permitted without his sanction, and without a proper license, which will in most cases require a definite royalty to be paid for the privilege of reproduction. The ultimate destination of the copyright and royalties will be in the discretion of the Government at the conclusion of the war. It is idle, therefore, to attack this Act on the ground that it is a breach of the Berne Convention. The Berne Convention upon the view taken above is no longer operative in this country as between belligerents; and the Act, far from breaking the Convention, may be even said to come to its assistance. If the country desires to have reproductions or translations of enemy publications, and there are many which may be of importance, it seems clear that some kind of regulated system is desirable in lieu of unregulated reproduction at the will of any person. The whole question of the proprietorship of such copyrights, and the destination of the royalties will, as I have already said, be left, as it properly should be, for determination at the conclusion of peace.

"Then I should like to say one word upon the subject of the procedure. The procedure in these cases will really follow the lines of procedure which we have already adopted in the case of applications for licenses under patents; that is to say, the applicant will have to make out a prima facie case, and really the only two points of proof that will be necessary will be the fact of publication in the enemy country, and that the publication was made during the period of hostilities. When some prima facie proof is given on those two points, then the only other question which arises is, upon what conditions shall a license be given by the Public Trustee? We have to advise the Public Trustee upon that, and any assistance which can be given we shall be glad to have. We have invited the Publishers' Association to help us on this point. There may be in the case of publications of this kind some general principle as to royalties, or some royalty which is recognized in the publishing world. If that is the case it would be very useful for us to have some information upon that point. I think that is practically the only evidence that will be necessary in these cases. There will not, I take it, be any opposition as there has been in the case of patents. Therefore, it will be really a question of considering what are the proper reasonable and fair terms upon which licenses should be given. There is perhaps one other point, and that is the question whether a license should be given at all. That may be raised possibly in certain cases where the reproduction is of no practical national importance or interest really to the public at large. I only throw that out; I do not believe it will arise, but it might be said there really is no public interest in reproducing some small ephemeral publication which has been made in Germany during the period of the war."

I should add that the intention of the Government to pass the bill was communicated to this Association in June last and the intention was approved because the Council of the Association had the assurance of the Law Officers of the Crown that the bill was, alike in letter and in spirit, in accord with the Berne Convention.

REGINALD J. SMITH,
President of the Publishers' Association.

SECRETARY OF ENGLISH AUTHORS' SOCIETY DEFENDS ENGLISH COPYRIGHT ACT London, Eng., October 25th, 1916.

Editor THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY:

I am sorry to read the article in the issue of your paper for the 30th September entitled "The Berne Convention as a Scrap of Paper," and the statement you have thought fit to make against England on the question of the passing of the Trading with the Enemy (Copyright) Act, 1916. I cannot but think that this article has been written owing to the ill-advised action of the Editor of The Publishers' Circular, and without full information as to the facts of the case. Not only have the Government of England not treated the Berne Convention as a scrap of paper but they have passed the Act referred to in order to maintain the highest principles of International Copyright. The position is as follows: The Law Officers of the Crown advised the Government that the Treaty, that is the revised Convention of Berne, as between the belligerent countries, ceased to exist on the declaration of war. If this was the correct view, and the Government were bound to consider it the correct view, then any pirate could have stepped in and taken advantage of the position to produce German works without reference to the copyright owners and after the war would have been free as regards any action taken by the German copyright owners for infringement of copyright.

To avoid this position and to maintain the principles of the Berne Convention the Government passed the Trading with the Enemy (Copyright) Act, 1916, in order that the German copyright owners might have no complaint that the English were infringing their rights without giving them compensation. In other words the Government were maintaining and not disregarding the principles of the Berne Convention.

Even if the Law Officers of the Crown have given the Government wrong advice, still the Germans will have nothing to complain of. First because it is possible that the Public Trustee may refuse to give any licenses and secondly, if he does give licenses, he will see that they are on a sound equitable basis and that the copyright owners will obtain as much as they would have obtained under the Berne Convention.

To talk as if the Copyright Act was passed in order to give pirates a free hand is to make a wilful misstatement, whether the action of the Government is right or wrong. The Act was passed, as I have already stated, in order to maintain to the full the principles which have been laid down under the International Convention.

G. HERBERT THRING, Secretary, Incorporated Society of Authors, Playwrights and Composers.

PERSONAL NOTES

W. D. HICKS recently resigned from the sales force of Charles E. Graham & Co.

CHAS. F. DAVENPORT, formerly with Joel Gutman & Co., of Baltimore, is now buying books and stationery for Loveman, Joseph & Loeb, of Birmingham, Ala.

W. H. PARKER, who, since selling his business in New Haven, has been with Brentano's, has returned to New Haven to take a position at Whitlock's Bookstore.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES

THE THOMAS Y. CROWELL COMPANY announces for immediate publication, a Christmas story by the Rev. Dr. Charles E. Jefferson of the Broadway Tabernacle, entitled "A Fire in The Snow."

THE FIVE-YEAR CUMULATIVE VOLUME, covering 1911-1915, of the "English Catalogue" is announced for December 1. Copies can be ordered thru the office of the Publishers' Weekly, American agents for the London publishers.

THE MACMILLAN Co. announce that the rising cost of paper will soon make it imperative to advance the price of H. G. Wells' "Mr. Britling Sees It Through." For the present, however, orders will be filled at the published price.

CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS understands the animal point of view about as well as anyone can without the help of transmigration. His new novel of the wilderness, well named "The Secret Trails," is to be published shortly by the Macmillan Co.

AFTER NOVEMBER I the Book Supply Co. is shipping all copies of "When a Man's a Man" wrapped in special Christmas slip cover in colors as illustrated on the postcard which they are sending out to the trade. Every dealer carrying the book will receive as many Christmas wrappers, free of charge, as he has copies of the book in stock, if he will fill out a postcard and mail it to the publishers.

CLOSE ON THE HEELS OF E. Boyd Smith's "In the Land of Make Believe," Messrs. Henry Holt and Company have issued an edition of "The Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin," their fourth book to be illustrated by this artist. His fifty illustrations include ten in color. Frank W. Pine has added an interesting account of Franklin, besides short selections from his writings.

FREDERICK PALMER has given us pictures of the war that will be among the few lasting ones. In his new novel "The Old Blood" he has an opportunity to show a young American's emotional response to the call of a great and just cause. Mr. Palmer first made his reputation as a novelist. His "The Last Shot" was one of the prominent novels of the days before the war.

THIS SEASON, which in its dances and music has given special prominence to Hawaii and the Philippine Islands, is the appropriate time for the publication of "The Spell of the Hawaiian Islands and the Philippines" which The Page Co. are bringing out. The author, Mrs. Larz Anderson, gives an account of the historical and political conditions of our Pacific islands, as well as descriptions of their natural charms. "The Spell of Scotland" by Keith Clark is another addition to the Spell Series. Both volumes are generously illustrated.

AGREEMENT BY WIRELESS and manuscript by submarine is the up-to-date record of Captain Paul Koenig's "Voyage of the Deutschland" which Hearst's International Library Co. will publish shortly in two editions, German and English. The book is the complete and authentic account of the first merchant submarine's trip from Bremen to Baltimore and return. The illustrations will be photographs taken in America and Germany. A portrait of Captain Koenig, suitable for framing, will come with each copy of the first edition.

THE CENTURY Co. announces the following publications for November: "The New Map of Africa," by Herbert Adams Gibbons; "A History of Ornament," by Prof. A. D. F. Hamlin; "How the World Makes Its Living," by Logan Grant McPherson; "The Possible Peace," by Roland Hugins; "The Art of Rodin," by Judith Cladel; "The Wonder-Box Stories," by Will Bradley; "Famous Sculpture," by Charles L. Barstow; and "Three Midnight Stories," by Alexander Wilson Drake.

Between two extremes—the people who don't know anything about it, but know what they like, and the people who have learned so much about it that their spontaneous preferences have been suppressed by the weight of authority—are the enlightened few who know what they like and why they like it. "The Creative Will," by Willard Huntington Wright, to be published November 24 by the John Lane Company, will help to give the amateur art critic a sound basis for his opinions. "The Creative Will" makes enquiry into the laws governing the creation and the appreciation of all the arts—painting, music, literature, architecture, and sculpture.

THE PUTNAMS are publishing this month "In Canada's Wonderful Northland," by W. Tees Curran and H. A. Calkins, B.Sc. This work describes the explorations and adventures of an exceptionally well-organized party, composed of over twenty engineers, mineralogists, trained explorers, woodsmen, and expert guides, who, with many tons of provisions and equipment, crossed the height-of-land in Ontario and proceeded by canoe and motor boat three hundred miles northward to Moose Factory on James Bay. Thence they cruised by motor and sailboat along the east coast of James and Hudson Bays five hundred miles farther northward.

One of the most serviceable dealer catalogs that reach us is the "Trade Catalogue of Books of All Publishers," issued by the Baker & Taylor Co. Nothing seems to have been overlooked in the effort to provide the retailer with everything he wishes to know about a book. Trade discounts on small and large lots are plainly given in every case, and the catalog is thoroly indexed under both author and title. In the front section are several pages of suggestions as to how best to use the Baker & Taylor special dealer service departments and how to send in orders and take care of "shorts," etc., so that they will be filled with the greatest speed and least inconvenience to the retailer.

The J. B. Lippincott Company announces that the price of George C. Thomas, Jr.'s "Practical Book of Outdoor Rose Growing" will be advanced to $5.00 on the 15th of this month. Among the books that will be published late this month by this house are two issues in their Practical Series, "The Practical Book of Early American Arts and Crafts," by Harold D. Eberlein and Abbot McClure and "The Practical Book of Architecture," by C. Matlack Price; Dr. Kunz's "Rings"; the "Allies' Fairy Book," illustrated by Arthur Rackham; Aesop's "Fables," illustrated by F. Opper; Dr. Joseph B. Cooke's "The Baby," "Home Labor Saving Devices and How to Make Them," by Rhea C. Scott and "The Teaching of Drawing," by S. Polak and H. C. Quilter.

GROSSET & DUNLAP announced November 1, that, owing to increased costs of paper, cloth and all the other materials used in bookmaking, they have been forced to adopt a new schedule of prices on various lines, while for the future "all prices are subject to change without notice." The trade generally in the great retail centers, such as New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Kansas City, etc., etc., have expressed their intention of adopting a 60-cent price on the lines affected, namely, popular copyrights, Everyboy's Library, Every Child Should Know Series, The Children's Crimson Series, and the James Whitcomb Riley books (7 titles), and the publishers urge the advisability of making this increase general. For the convenience of the dealers, the publishers have prepared 60-cent gummed stickers to be pasted over the 50-cent price on their new fall list of "Best Fiction at Popular Prices."

Bennett, Arnold. The lion's share. N. Y., Doran. c. 426 p. O $1.50 n.

Audrey Moze's domineering father had given her no opportunity for initiative. The sudden deaths of Mr. and Mrs. Moze left Audrey free to carry out her desire to get "the lion's share" of life. With a large fortune at her disnosal, she set out on her adventure, calling herself a widow. In Paris she met a young musician whom she helped to success in rather an impersonal way. Back in England, Audrey devoted herself for a time to the suffrage cause, but this was not her vocation. After an adventure in aiding a suffragette friend to evade the police, Audrey's musician reappeared and settled her future.

capture the trophies necessary to claim the Comeliest Maid. He falls into the hands of the valley people, who enslave and torture him until he is considered tamed. In time, he loves and marries a woman of the valley people. But Calinga's primitive nature reasserts itself, when he sees once more the Comeliest Maid, a captive on 'the very day of his wife's death.
With vows of vengeance for all his wrongs, Calinga escapes in company with the Comeliest Maid.

Partly from pride, partly for the sake of her father, Elizabeth Colquhoun turned from Warr, the man she loved to make a marriage á-la-mode with the Marquess of Rotherholme. She and Warr continued to meet in London, at house-parties, and even at Cannes, while she did her best to play her part as a happy woman. She was not happy, and instead of going back to his work in Persia, Warr, as it were, stood by as a ship does to help another should she signal. The Marquess' first wife, whom he believed dead, came forward. In spite of everyone's advice that matters could be arranged, and her marriage made legal, Elizabeth went out into her freedom.

The literary critic of Life discusses in a stimulating way the psychology of reading. Points out how, in the act of reading, the reader must re-create the action of the book in his own mind, drawing upon his own observation and experience for picturizing. In other words, reading is not a trick, it is a structure made of our reactions toward life. Also has something to say about much-raking the dictionary, watching the wheels go round, getting a sense of direction, and about the critic himself.

Sidgwick, Ethel. Hatchways. Bost., Small, Maynard. c. 441 p. D $1.40 n.

With Gabriel du Frettay one makes the acquaintance of the country-house set that gravitates around Mrs. Redgate and her little place, Hatchways. Among them was the dowager Duchess of Wickford, her sons, the duke and Lord Iveagh. du Frettay has come to observe English life, and he is so discriminating he sees why Mrs. Redgate, and not the duchess, is the leader, and learns from her about the concern over Iveagh, and the duchess's determination to marry her sons appropriately. Iveagh is in love with a married woman, harmlessly, except that no one can tell what he may do in order to forget it. Novel is a subtle study of temperaments and of mothers, masterful and otherwise. Iveagh found the solution of his troubled tangie himself, while the Frenchman went home to marry his mother's choice.

LOW PRICES — A NEW POLICY

For many years we have been favorably known as binders of the better classes of edition work. In addition, we have handled large quantities of moderate-priced bindings. We are now organized to handle popular-priced bindings in larger quantities and at lower prices.

A new schedule of prices just inaugurated will be found interesting.

ROBINS CRUSOE

By DANIEL DEFOE

"Pinocchio" and "Robinson Crusoe" are the latest additions. "Pinocchio" is the amusing story of a puppet. It is an Italian classic, a truly delightful story. "Robinson Crusoe" needs no introduction. He is the spirit of true romance for all youngsters.
